Measures taken to prevent the destruction of unsold consumer products	ASOS takes steps to prevent the destruction of unsold consumer goods by prioritising reuse routes, including resale through sample sale channels and sales to third-party product resellers. Destruction of unsold goods only occurs as a last resort where products are required to be destroyed, for example due to a legal requirement, a health & safety requirement, or in cases where products cannot be sold (i.e. due to offensive content), reused or otherwise reworked. As a result, over 95% of the goods discarded in the reporting year (by weight) were prepared for reuse. This is based on an assumption that goods sent to third-party product resellers are resold. In recent years we have invested significant time and effort in ensuring we purchase the right amount of product to match consumer demand, as part of our focus on implementing a more efficient operating model. This includes our Test & React model, where we test customer demand for product before ordering in volume, enabling us to operate more efficiently. This report, covering the 12 months to August 2025, followed the announcement of a £100m inventory write-down announced on 5th November 2024. Some items related to this write-down are expected to be captured in the data disclosed below.
Measures planned to prevent the destruction of unsold consumer products	Discipline in our buying practices to ensure we purchase the right volume of product remains a key focus for our business. To support future reporting, we plan to implement additional data collection processes to verify assumptions related to product reseller behaviour, improve visibility of waste treatment routes and, where applicable, derogations, in future disclosures. The 'Unknown' product type has been used for this report where the product could not be mapped to a CN code on our internal systems (for example due to it being old stock). Improved focus on data collection and reporting will ensure we close disclosure gaps. This report has been prepared in compliance with Article 24 1(a), 1(b), 1(d) of the Regulation (EU) 2024/1781 (ESPR). We are working towards compliance with Article 24 1(c) in future reports.
